what do I think now?

Experiencing the courses in two semesters, I believe that the way of seeing the world has changed. Although there is still something that I avoid to think about deeply, I still try to make things better. This course helps us think critically about the future, love, and so on. The following relate to what I learn from the class.

Trying to set a goal about the future becomes the first task to improve myself. Considering my passion and imaging the blueprint, I need to discover the ability that the job requires in order to make a goal. Unfortunately, it is commonly believed in Taiwan that any interest is difficult to become your job. However, the reasons are weak since people consider they are two separated fields and can not combine them. In my opinion, it will color the life if they mix with each other. Therefore, being a photographer firstly comes to my mind because it's my favorite interest. In fact, I do not exactly know about myself, but I would like to figure out what is my suitable job. Hence, I plan to change from job to a job, believing that life should not exist only in one way. In my plan, devoting myself to an interest and becoming a professor is my life's outline. It needs a lot of effects and time, and hope I will succeed .

Recently, I have found that love have other meanings and understandings that it are absolutely complex. I watched a movie. The main character watched a film about his friends wanting to say something for him. Every person is different and coincidentally says "I love you" in the end. Suddenly, he realized that everyone said they love him, but no one truly loved him. For me, I see that love is superficial, excessive and empty. Showing your love to someone is important, but it becomes nothing when you abuse it. Occasionally, love is also contradicting. Another story is about my friend. She and her boyfriend usually meet each other once per week. I wondered if she would really miss him sometimes. She answered me that their love contains too much reality to share more time for their relationship. They must make lots of effort to achieve their dream. Nonetheless, I do not know if it is love if it lacks company. From these points, I learn that love is complicated and not only exists in one facet.

This is quite deep. Perhaps you just need experience. Dreams help us to have something to hold on to. But the dream doesn't exist unless we give it substance. Wondering about love will not help you understand it more than reading about it in a book. Your experience, like the guy in the movie, will help you get there but you must experience it...though a lack of experience is also experience...

Be careful of parts of speech for some words. Be careful with the word 讓. It has many meanings but often the way most use it here you mean "make" as in "to force/cause to happen"
